COMPUTER DATA BASE BACKUP

Richard L. Miller, Ann Arbor, Michigan

The following short article sets forth circumstances that lead to data lost in a computer system and presents methods for backup against such loss on a small or single user system. Large computer systems have more automatic backup procedures but the loss circumstances are the same. Manuals provided with each computer system should be consulted for the definition of terms.

A proper backup is achieved if, on losing your current data on your active disk, you are able to recover the data with little lost time and mental stress. It is important to know the various ways that data can be lost. Hard disk failure is of great concern and is the computer failure most people worry about. But there are others that pose serious risks. Floppy disks may contain defective areas where data cannot be reliably stored. Floppy disk drives may become defective. A program sometimes contains programming errors that appear under special circumstances. A user may alter or delete data erroneously. The disk may be destroyed by fire, or eaten by your pet. Mislaying the backup disks can be a problem. The following practices will provide a backup for most situations.

Keep a log indicating the date and time of every modification of the data base and a print out reflecting changes to the data base; be organized. Backup disks need to be carefully prepared. Format six disks and label them 1 to 6 or A to E. If your computer has 3.5 inch and 5.25 inch disks, alternate between the sizes. Use a program, such as Norton's DISK TEST to check the quality of each disk. For your first backup use disk 1. On your second backup use disk 2. Use successive disks in turn and when you have used disk 6, start over with disk 1. Be sure to record the disk number of the last backup disk in your log book. The above procedure provides a six generation backup. Make notes in your log book on the location and number of backup disks. If your current generation is lost you can go back to an ancestor and type in recent changes. After each backup, determine if the backup is valid. Use directory commands to look at the size and date of backup files to see if they correspond to your originals on the hard disk. With DOS computers use the CHKDSK command to make sure the files are stored correctly. Use the restore features of your program, if available, to restore the data to another directory on your hard disk and check to see if the data base has the data you expect.

Some data base programs provide archival commands. Make sure you know which files are saved. If your data base program does not include an archival utility, then you must use a copy command to copy relevant files to your backup disk or use a utility program such as FASTBACK or Norton BACKUP. Make sure you backup all of the files that contain data. Usually you can find these files by noting creation dates. Store some of your backup disks in locations away from your computer area. Make a print-out of your data set occasionally. Optical character recognition can be used to recover data and the printout will also be useful for correcting errors.

Comments regarding disaster recover should be made. We don't always do the things we should. Erased files can be recovered providing no other file is written to the disk after the erasure. Norton's UNERASE is an example of one unerase utility. If a hard disk crashes, the data may still be recovered. Sometimes a hard disk won't spin up but can be started by gently rocking the drive. Do you remember how to start an old watch ticking by rocking it in the plane of the escapement wheel? Hard disks fail for several reasons and some are easily corrected. Don't trade in your old disk if you have irreplacable data. But of course if you have a backup, you don't have to worry about disaster recovery. Have fun with your data sets and be prepared not to worry.

WASHTENAW COUNTY CIRCUIT COURT NATURALIZATIONS, 1853-1859

Abstracted by Nancy H. Krohn

Volume 15 of Circuit Court Naturalizations (1853-1859) is the first journal used completely for naturalization records in Washtenaw County and is composed of printed forms, one person per page. The Clerk of the Court at this time was Robert J. Berry. This book is housed in the Michigan State Archives in Lansing.

The record dates on pages 80 through 92 may be in error.

The following notes apply to this abstract:

Declaration of Intention is listed as "D." Petition as "P." Final Order or Naturalizations as "F.O." This information is taken from the first Naturalization Index. Many names, but not all, in this journal were first indexed as a Declaration and (later) reindexed as a Petition or Final Order.
Age is the age at date of record.
Country from which emigrated is omitted if the same as place of birth.
Arrival year in Michigan is omitted if it is the same year as emigration.
Renounced allegiance to a Foreign Prince Potentate, State or Sovereignty is noted by locality only following the date of arrival. For example, "Wurtemburg" if allegiance to the King of Wurtemburg is renounced, "Great Britain" if to the King of Great Britain and Ireland. If this locality is the same as place of birth it is omitted.
Locality (place of intended residence) following date of event is omitted if it is Washtenaw County.
